

THE MORNING APPEAL.

WEDNESDAY.....MAY 1

THE JOURNAL ON CLOSED DOORS.

The Reno Journal has the following:

A large amount of money has been stolen from the United States Mint at Carson. The theft was discovered and made public by the present Mint officials. An investigation was ordered and an experienced assayer sent here to conduct it. An employee of the Mint, who, it is alleged, must have been aware of the shortage, as it occurred in a department that was under his immediate supervision, was arrested and charged with the theft. The examination of the accused is being conducted with closed doors. The people have been robbed by some person or persons who took oath to protect their property and receive pay for doing so. One of those accused of being false to his trust is on trial and the people are not permitted to know what foundation, if any, except that he was employed at the Mint, there is for the charge that he is a thief. They are kept in ignorance of what transpires at the examination. The learned counsel in the case stipulate that the public shall not know how the case is being conducted. The local newspapers publish what is purported to be a report of the testimony and proceedings at the examination, but what one asserts as having transpired another as emphatically denies; so the public doubt, and with good reason, the correctness of each and all of the reports.

The people of the United States, who have been robbed by those sworn and paid to protect their property, are the plaintiffs in the Mint case. The prosecution is conducted in their name, and the attorney for the people says the prosecution has nothing to conceal in the matter. It may then be asked why the doors of the halls of justice, where the examination is being held, are closed against the people? Has he commissioner before whom the examination is conducted, of his own violation decided to have the examination private? Is the whole business a farce, as persons who assume to know what they are talking about, say it is?

The APPEAL will state on the authority of good lawyers that there is no need of closed doors, and that no man is bound to secrecy regarding the testimony and that the Court cannot commit anyone for contempt, who discloses what transpires in the Court room.

Garbled and Erroneous Reports.

Editor Journal:—On my return from Carson this evening my attention was directed to what purported to be a report of my evidence in the Mint investigation as published in to-night's Carson Tribune, and I would like to say in justice to myself that some of the statements regarding what I said are radically incorrect. In the first place I did not say that "Heney brought gold amalgam to the Reno Reduction Works on August 23, 1893," or at any other time. What I did state was that he brought the gold bullion. Second—I did not say that "the amalgam resembled the gold granulations in the Mint." Gold amalgam could not resemble gold granulations any more than a cow could resemble a grindstone. In the next place I did not testify that Heney was a tall Irishman. What I said was that I thought he was a young Irishman, and in answer to a question answered that I thought he was about my own height or about five feet eight inches tall. There are some other errors in the Tribune report but of no less moment. I do not think the Tribune intended to misrepresent me, but it is a satisfaction to me to make an early correction. H. H. Beck.

Reno, April 29, 1895.

If Mr. Beck did not testify that Heney brought gold amalgam to his place, he did not testify to the "whole truth." Now we do not for a moment assume that Mr. Beck would hold back any portion of the truth when under oath. He must then be ignorant of what gold amalgam is.

Heney brought gold bullion to Beck and also something which Beck in his testimony constantly alluded to as "stuff." It was really gold amalgam, but Mr. Beck did not seem to be aware of the fact. A man who runs a reduction works ought to know what gold amalgam is and not designate it merely as "stuff" on the witness stand.

Mr. Beck in reading this may know for the first time that the stuff he testified to was really gold amalgam.

An Eastern paper says the income tax returns show that a great many people are spending more than $4,000 per year without making it.
